

PSYCHIATRIC DISORDERS

A biblical approach to understanding complex problems

with David Powlison, Edward T. Welch, and Michael Emlet

Psychiatric Disorders—A biblical approach to understanding complex problems
Copyright © 2015, by the Christian Counseling and Educational Foundation.
All rights reserved.

Speakers	Curriculum Development
David Powlison	Bruce E. Eaton
Edward T. Welch	Rebecca Eaton
Michael Emler

Permissions

This workbook is intended for personal use. No part of this workbook, with the exception of the Group Handouts, may be reproduced or copied in any means except with the prior written consent of the Christian Counseling and Educational Foundation.

Requests for additional permissions should be sent to Customer Service.

Customer Service
1803 East Willow Grove Avenue
Glenside, PA 19038
1-800-318-2186
customerservice@ccef.org

ISBN: 978-1-938294-12-9

The Christian Counseling and Educational Foundation (CCEF) is a non-profit ministry founded in 1968. CCEF exists to restore Christ to counseling and counseling to the church. We accomplish this mission through our teaching, writing, and counseling ministries. To learn more about CCEF, visit us at www.ccef.org.

About the Speakers

David Powlison, MDiv, PhD

David is the executive director of the Christian Counseling and Educational Foundation (CCEF). He is also a faculty member at CCEF and the senior editor of the Journal of Biblical Counseling. He holds a PhD from the University of Pennsylvania and an MDiv from Westminster Theological Seminary. He has counseled for over 30 years and has written numerous articles on biblical counseling and on the relationship between faith and psychology. His books include Speaking Truth in Love; Seeing with New Eyes; Power Encounters: Reclaiming Spiritual Warfare; and The Biblical Counseling Movement: History and Context. David has taught across the United States and in Korea, India, Brazil, Europe, and Sri Lanka.

Edward T. Welch, MDiv, PhD

Ed is a licensed psychologist and faculty member at CCEF. He has counseled for over thirty years and is the best-selling author of many books including Shame Interrupted; When People Are Big and God Is Small; Addictions: A Banquet in the Grave; Depression: Looking Up from the Stubborn Darkness; Running Scared: Fear, Worry, and the God of Rest; Blame It on the Brain; and Side by Side: Walking with Others in Wisdom and Love. Ed has taught across the United States and in India, Brazil, Australia, and Europe.

Michael Emler, MDiv, MD

Mike is a counselor and faculty member at CCEF. He holds an MD from the University of Pennsylvania and an MDiv degree from Westminster Theological Seminary. He practiced as a family physician for 12 years before joining CCEF. He has authored the mini-books: Asperger Syndrome; Help for the Caregiver; OCD; and Angry Children, and the book: CrossTalk: Where Life & Scripture Meet. Mike has served at CCEF for fourteen years. Mike has taught across the United States and in India.

PSYCHIATRIC DISORDERS

A biblical approach to understanding complex problems

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Getting Started	2
Making Sense of Complex Problems David Powlison	3
What is Going On Inside: Understanding the Human Experience Ed Welch	13
Understanding Labels and Diagnoses Mike Emler	22
Understanding the Use of Medication in Psychiatric Treatments Mike Emler	30
What You Can Do To Help Ed Welch	41
Group Handouts	49

Getting Started

There are no pat answers or quick fixes for the kind of brokenness that psychiatric disorders describe. People who have been labeled with disorders like OCD, PTSD, Bipolar Disorder, ADHD, and Borderline Personality Disorder are faced with real struggles and a complexity of personal and interpersonal problems. What do these diagnostic labels mean for strugglers and for those who want to help them? How should we understand the use of medication in the care of psychiatric problems from a biblical perspective? Is there any help to be found in the various secular counseling approaches? What goes into restoring and rebuilding a life? These are important questions, because a person struggling with all-consuming and complex problems needs wise help.

Ministry, when it's with someone like you, seems relatively easy: know yourself and you can know others. But what about those who are not like you? Not only are there personality differences among people but also brain and behavioral differences. People struggling with complex problems hurt deeply, feel socially isolated, and are often misunderstood. What does it look like to enter into the world of someone who has been labeled with a psychiatric disorder? What are the unique and complex experiences of this person? Learning how to move toward those different from us with the love of Jesus will not only unite us, it will give us a true understanding of our "sameness" in Christ.

Biblical counseling must offer help that wisely handles this complexity of need. Helpers must have a feel for the slow processes of change, be willing to live within uncertainties, and yet keep our bearings. We must combine indestructible hope with realistic expectations. So how do we biblically and lovingly engage those who are struggling?

This study will help guide you through a meaningful understanding of people who have complex problems and how to offer biblical help. This study is designed to be used individually or in a group setting.

A Note For Groups

This curriculum can be used at two different levels for group study. For an in-depth study, both leader and participants can use this Workbook and Study Questions. Participants at this level will have some familiarity with the model of biblical counseling as presented at CCEF through our resources and classes.

For an introductory study, the group leader can use the Workbook as preparation for facilitating group discussion and provide participants with copies of the Group Handouts. In this setting, we recommend selecting a few Study Questions from each section of questions for your group discussion that will develop the particular interests and needs of the group.

Making Sense of Complex Problems

David Powlison

BEFORE YOU BEGIN

Before viewing “Making Sense of Complex Problems,” watch a commercial advertisement for an anti-depressant. Commercials for anti-depressants can be found by searching on YouTube®. As you watch, think about what the commercial promises and consider any unspoken messages you can identify. Here are some questions to consider: What conclusions do you draw from this video about drug effectiveness? How does the commercial make you feel? Do you relate to the struggler? Do you believe this drug is the solution to the struggle?

* * * *

INTRODUCTION

A Christian vision for counseling recognizes that there is something about the nature of worship in the vertical dimension and actually loving people in the horizontal that is the truest and only sanity of which human beings are capable.

The goal of this curriculum is to move from studying a topic to embracing a calling: that we would wisely love people who live complex lives.

THREE POINTS OF CONTACT BETWEEN PSYCHIATRY AND CHRISTIANITY¹

Point 1: Understanding and helping

Christianity and Psychiatry are both preoccupied with the same two extremely important questions: How do we understand troubled people? How do we help troubled people? The first is a question of explanation and the second is a question of efficacy. How do we understand people enough so that we can move toward them and help with their problems?

Point 2: Living in the same world

We all live within the same world and deal with the same complexity of need. Isaiah 61:1-2² in a profound way captures that need. This passage speaks about every human being, including those who struggle with complex problems. The Christian response should never be a reductionism; there are no quick fixes or pat answers for these profound problems and needs. The Christian answer is going to be as complex as the real God working in the real world.

Point 3: Personal stories matter

Christianity and Psychiatry are both interested in personal stories. Consider the heartbreaking story of Marion presented in the talk. Her story captures two fundamental things: the world is not kind and who we are is not kind. The Christian faith must answer the questions raised by personal stories like Marion's. How do we meet her cry of need and pain?

UPSTREAM AND DOWNSTREAM PSYCHIATRY³

Consider this metaphor as you seek to approach and engage with Psychiatry: upstream the air is pure and the water is clean, downstream the water is dirty and people are desperate for answers and help. This metaphor is helpful in understanding some huge differences between upstream psychiatry and downstream psychiatry.

Tendencies of Downstream Psychiatry⁴

1. DSM categories name real things.
2. The cause of complex problems is understood as having a genetic and biochemical basis.
3. Psychiatric medications actually cure disorders.
4. Sick people are qualitatively different than normal people.
5. Mental health personnel are the go to professionals that have the knowledge, the answers, and the explanations for complex problems. The legitimacy for treatment belongs exclusively to that world and by implication the church has no significant role.

Thoughtfulness of Upstream Psychiatry

1. There is an admirable humility.
2. Cautious assertions and an absence of big claims about what can be known.

3. Realism about both partial achievements and real limits.
4. A thoughtful internal self-criticism; the willingness to reflect on strengths, weaknesses, and possible problems.

Examples of Upstream Thought

The human mind cannot be reduced merely to biology.

The more we learn about the workings of the mind, the more we realize that we can never reduce human thought, feeling, or behavior to a bio-chemical reaction.⁵ Our knowledge of biology by no means rules out the significance of psychological factors, nor does our knowledge of genetics rule out the significance of environmental factors.⁶

Armand M. Nikolai, Jr., MD, Harvard Psychiatrist

There is a range of human emotion and struggle that is considered normal.

Mental illnesses occur on a continuum, with no clear natural boundary between non-disorder and disorder... The real problem afflicting our field is the problem of distinguishing between the normal range of human emotions and what we should consider to be a disorder.⁷

Richard McNally, PhD, Harvard Experimental Psychopathologist

There is no radical cleavage between normal people and sick people.

The therapist may approach the patient merely as a case, whose character structures and defenses must be assessed in order to attach the appropriate diagnostic label. Or he may look beyond the patient's pathology to see a fellow human being with unique characteristics and with the same hopes, fears, aspirations, feelings, and perhaps (except for differences in degree) same conflicts as his own.⁸

Armand M. Nikolai, Jr., MD, Harvard Psychiatrist

Humans need meaning and relationship.

We psychiatrists have been given an impossible task. Our medications are sometimes able to alleviate symptoms, though they often come with side effects. But we cannot give people what they really need. People need meaning and relationship.⁹

Steven E. Hyman, MD, Former Director of National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH)

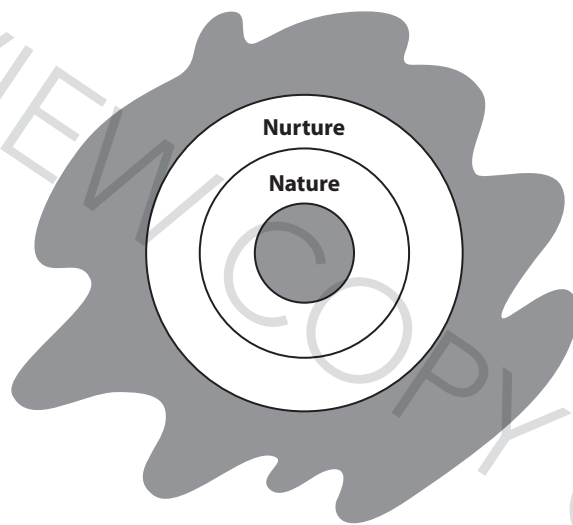

NESTED CIRCLES¹⁰

Consider the following diagrams as they are introduced. The first three are critiques of the limited view the world (and the church) has about the person. The final diagram showcases a Christian understanding.

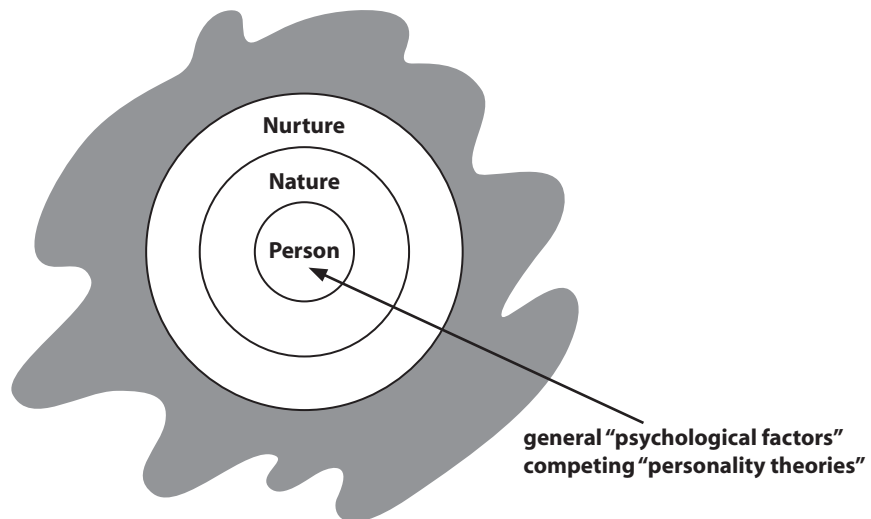

If anything has been gleaned from the origins of these maladies in two decades of work, it is that the genetics of psychiatric disorders are terribly complex. No individual gene for a psychiatric disorder has been found and none likely will ever be... Psychiatric troubles are incredibly complicated and poorly understood and involve an intricate, infinite, dialectical dance between experience and biology.¹¹

Charles Barber, MFA, Yale Psychiatry Professor

The bio-medical approach understands the interplay between the body and social surroundings, but misses the person.

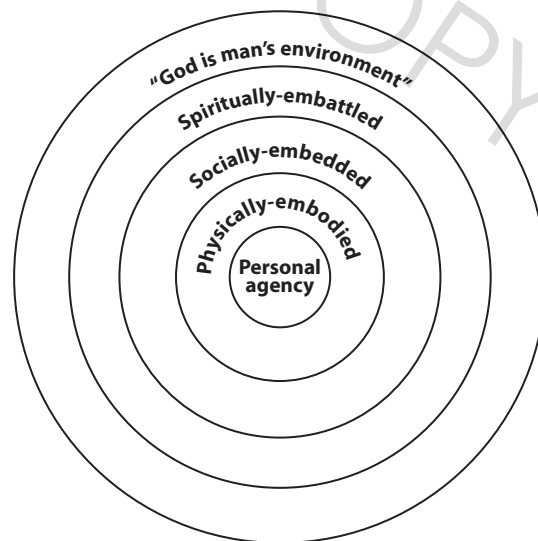

In Psychiatry there will be assertions of general psychological factors, expectancies and patterns of desire, but it will be non-specific. In contrast, biblical Christian faith has a profound engagement with the person and understands that life is mediated through the brain, through the heart, and through who you are as a person.

When it comes to addressing the problems of life and their consequences, the Church tends to focus on moralism, pietism or animism as the means to solve a person's complex problems. The human being is envisioned as a soul on the mountaintop with spiritual issues going on.

The Christian gaze is able to develop a picture that recognizes and considers the whole person. We live in a personal and interpersonal universe, and human beings are God-relational beings.

1. Every human being lives in God's world.
2. Human beings are spiritually embattled.
3. Human beings are socially embedded.
4. Human beings are physically embodied.

5. And at the center is a robust sense of personal agency. We are always persons; the person never reduces in response to other forces impinging upon it. And there is a complexity that is involved in all things that are “human” because each aspect of existence is always working in every person at every moment.

MAKE MODEST CLAIMS

Think carefully, what will we claim as Christians? Will we claim to have the complete answer and explanation? Will we claim to offer the guaranteed way to fix all that has gone wrong? The answer: Absolutely not.

This topic gazes right into the brokenness of the universe, the very things for which the Son of God entered into ministry: to bind up the broken hearted and to open the eyes of the blind. This topic speaks to the depth of human need, and no one has ownership over the complete answer and the guaranteed cure. But as Christians we make modest claims.¹²

1. The Christian view has a rich identification with the person who is troubled and a clear sense of what care will involve.
2. The Christian view is able to say something of essential importance about the human heart that is always true.
3. The Christian view can say something of essential importance about how the heart interacts with life experience—whether it’s physical experience, social experience, suffering, trauma, betrayal, disease, sickness—we can say something that matters and is always relevant.

In making modest claims, what can we do? If downstream psychiatry is over promise, under deliver, then our attitude in engaging these problems should be under promise, over deliver. We can promise what is realistic: we have something to say that matters and is relevant. And we know that the Christian faith over delivers into the most broken and troubled lives.

THREE WAYS TO HELP

We can always bring three things into any life: steady human kindness, clarity and relevance as you speak about the mercies of God in Christ, and the sanity of prayer.

* * * * *

REVISIT THE COMMERCIAL

After watching “Making Sense of Complex Problems” revisit the same commercial and watch it again.¹³ How has your impression changed? Do you notice any “downstream” thinking previously missed?

* * * *

STUDY QUESTIONS

The following study questions are divided into three sections. Section 1 questions are introductory and allow for an opportunity to reflect on the lecture. Section 2 questions focus on the content of the lecture. Section 3 questions help you apply the material you have learned. Feel free to select a couple questions from each section for your reflection. If you have the time, answer each question.

Section 1: Introduction Questions

David Powlison says in his talk, “The Christian answer to psychiatric disorders is going to be as complex as the working of the real God, in the real world—the world that he has chosen to step into and to go to work in, rolling up his sleeves and working, with these problems, exactly as they are.”

1. As you reflect on this statement, how does it impact your attitude toward people who may struggle with a psychiatric disorder?
2. How does your background (pastor, professional or clinical counselor, biblical counselor, or counseling student) influence you as you watch the video? Do you believe Christianity has a substantial message that can help people with complex problems? Or are you skeptical about Christianity’s ability to help someone like Marion?

The goal of this talk is to move you from studying a topic to embracing a calling. David says, “We make sense of something so we can do something, so we might love well and love wisely.”

1. What is your first reaction to this challenge? Does the call to love well and wisely feel even more difficult because of the content of this study, because of the person you would need to reach out to?
2. Brainstorm about what information you would need to know and the questions you would need answered in order to grow in your ability to love well and wisely.

Section 2: Interacting with the Material

Consider the three points of contact between Christianity and Psychiatry that were introduced in this talk. First, both are preoccupied with the same questions of life. Second, we all live in the same world and deal with the same complexity of need. Third, personal stories matter.

1. Where are you on the scale between “very receptive” and “completely dismissive” of believing there are points of contact between Christianity and the psychiatric community? What makes it easier or harder for you to accept that Christianity shares some of the same interests and concerns with the psychiatric community?
2. What other points of similarity and difference have you experienced or heard of between these two communities?

Think about the five general tendencies in ‘downstream’ psychiatric thinking outlined in this talk: 1) the DSM categories name real things, 2) the causes of problems are understood as genetic and biochemical, 3) medications cure disorders, 4) sick people are qualitatively different than normal people, and 5) mental health professionals have the exclusive knowledge, answers and explanations for complex problems.

1. Discuss the implications of assuming that these statements are true without question. Why is it important to wrestle with these statements when you are helping someone who has been diagnosed with a psychiatric disorder?
2. Is it legitimate for the church to try and help people with complex problems? What do the Scriptures tell us about the transformative role the church has in broken lives?
3. How do you summarize the conflicting messages inherent upstream and downstream?

Section 3: Application Questions

In his talk, David tells a heartbreaking story about a young woman named Marion. He concludes by saying that the Christian faith “addresses human questions and human issues, and we all come to the table with stories like this one.”

1. As you think about your ministry or counseling experiences, what have been the challenges and the joys of engaging with a person that you believe is struggling with a complex problem?

2. Why is it important to remember that the Christian faith addresses the questions and issues that every person faces? How may this approach lead to different conversations and answers for a person who has received secular help before?
3. What have been your primary concerns and goals when you engage a person who struggles with a complex and life-dominating problem? How does the extremity of their everyday life situation affect the way you engage them?

At the beginning of his talk, David asks the questions, “Why should we care? Why get involved? Why do anything?” At the end of his talk he asks another, “What should Christians claim to be able to do for someone who struggles with a complex problem?”

1. How do you answer these questions? What are your motives? What can you hope to accomplish in the life of someone struggling with a complex problem?
2. What have you learned by watching and engaging with this talk?

Revisit the Nested Circles diagram and think about the deep need facing people who struggle with psychiatric disorders. Consider how this picture of the person as a whole being provides you with a richer understanding of a person.

1. How does the Nested Circles diagram incorporate the truths that are expressed in the upstream psychiatric community and still move you toward the Christian gaze on the matter of psychiatric disorders?
2. How does the divide between theory and practice in the psychiatric community that David describes affect your receptivity to their work? Are you willing to incorporate their observations into your thinking if they prove helpful for understanding and helping a person who suffers with a psychiatric disorder?

Toward the end of his talk David quotes the former director of the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH): “We psychiatrists have been given an impossible task. Our medications are sometimes able to alleviate symptoms, though they often come with side effects, but we cannot give people what they really need. People need meaning and relationship.”

1. Does this comment encourage you to engage with broken people? If so, what do you and Christianity have to offer?
2. How can you begin to apply what you’ve heard about the state of Psychiatry today—the limitations and the self-critique—to your engagement with someone who struggles with a psychiatric diagnosis?

¹ In his article, “A Discussion Among Clergy: Pastoral Counseling Talks with Secular Psychology,” Edward T. Welch engages the points of contact between Christianity and Psychology and offers a case to consider the Christian model. This resource is especially helpful for counselors and pastors (Journal of Biblical Counseling 13:2).

² Reflect on this more later. Read Luke 4:16-22. Can you find justification in this passage for accepting the point that “brokenness and need characterize the reality of every one of our lives, and by extension the life of every single person we will ever deal with?”

³ For a more detailed analysis of the views presented in this video, reference David Powlison’s article, “Modern Therapies and the Church’s Faith.” This article discusses the historical development of the professions (psychiatrist, psychologist, social worker) and distinguishes between them (Journal of Biblical Counseling 15:1).

⁴ Reflect on this more later. Most of us live in the “downstream” world. What do you hear downstream? Fundamentally, how do you describe people’s problems, what language do you use?

⁵ Reflect on this more later. Think about a recent advertisement for a drug to treat depression or anxiety. How do the messages found in these television commercials compare to the statements quoted by Armand Nikolai?

⁶ Armand M. Nicolai, “Introduction,” in The Harvard Guide to Psychiatry, Third Edition, Armand M. Nicolai, Editor, p. 3. Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press (1999).

⁷ Richard J. McNally, What is Mental Illness?, pp. 13-14. Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press (2011).

⁸ Armand M. Nicolai, “The Therapist-Patient Relationship,” in The Harvard Guide to Psychiatry, Third Edition, Armand M. Nicolai, Editor. Cambridge, MA: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press (1999).

⁹ This is a summary of an interview with Steven E. Hyman which aired in the late 1990’s on a National Public Radio (NPR) show entitled “The State of Psychiatry in America Today.”

¹⁰ For a more detailed presentation of the Nested Circles diagram, reference Michael R. Emler’s article, “Understanding the Influences on the Human Heart” (Journal of Biblical Counseling 20:2).

¹¹ Charles Barber, “The Brain: A Mindless Obsession” (The Wilson Quarterly: Winter, 2008).

¹² If you are interested in an in-depth study on how people change (including people with complex problems), we encourage you to take the introductory course, Dynamics of Biblical Change. In this course David Powlison presents a biblical model for counseling and shares how the Christian view has a rich identification with the troubled person. Students explore a biblical view of transformation and learn first-hand how God invades the particular struggles in their lives through self-counseling projects and group interaction.

¹³ A note for group leaders: In Edward T. Welch’s article, “Review of Prozac Backlash by Joseph Glenmullen” (Journal of Biblical Counseling 19:1), he engages the downstream and upstream metaphor presented in this video. In it he also discusses the claims pharmaceutical companies make about psychiatric medications. This article can be used as a help for leaders facilitating group discussions.